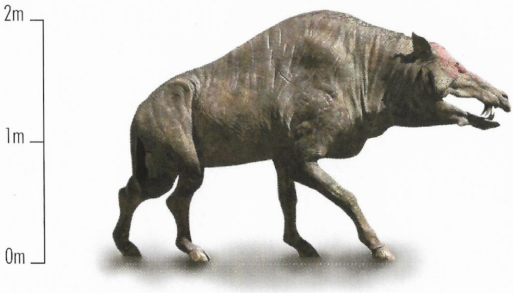
INTRODUCING...

ENTELODONT



40 million years B.C., a hot, dusty plain. A thunder of hooves, and 350 kilos of sweating, snorting Entelodont bursts into view, oozing aggression.

Full instructions to make up this model can be found at the back of this booklet.

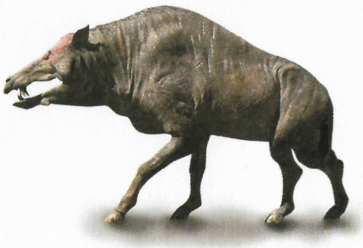
CLOSEST LIVING RELATIVES

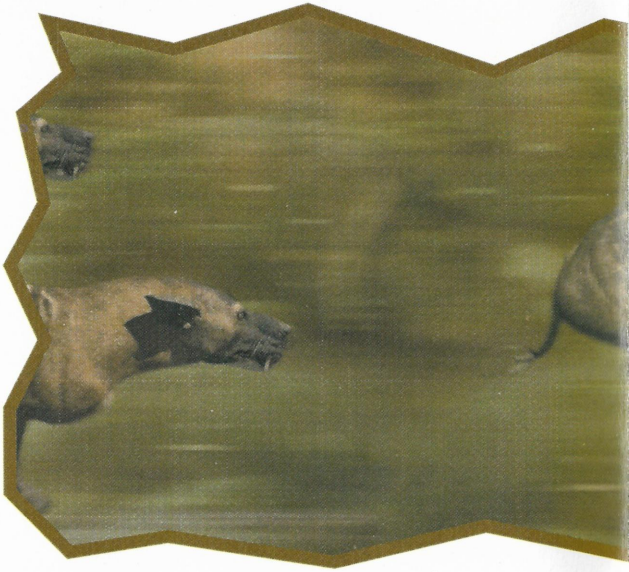
Pigs

FOSSIL FINDS

Partial skeletons are commonly found in the Hsanda Gol fossil beds of Mongolia, but there are very similar and much better preserved fossils found in North America.



These enormous relatives of modern pigs are common in Mongolia in 45–25 million years B.C.



ENTELODONT

If the world were a schoolyard and all the animals school children, then Entelodont would be the big, bullying class dunce.

Looking like a cross between a pig and a tank and standing fully two metres tall, Entelodont is a killer hog which all sensible animals give a very wide berth.

GLUE

With a brain the size of a fist, there are only ever two things on Entelodont's mind – food and girls, and he is always ready to fight doggedly for both of them.

With jaws designed for crushing bone, and a huge, incredibly hard skull, Entelodont is definitely one animal to avoid.

ENTELODONT

Don't tangle with this big pig – make him angry, and he'll come at you trying to bite your face off with his enormous jaws!

Thought they were extinct? Think again! Simply assemble this moving model, then turn the handle to bring Entelodont back to life.
